

Monday, August 18, 2008

Video Monitoring Program for Peace of Mind

Today, parents are getting their needs met with the launch of a unique video monitoring program from Sittercity.com, America's largest and most trusted online network of caregivers.

Sittercity's video monitoring program, now available at www.sittercity.com, consists of a wireless video camera that sends live video feeds to any computer or smart phone. Setup is simple: just plug and play. Sittercity is the first of its kind to offer this type of program.

"We have many members sharing their insecurities and concerns about not knowing what's going on in their homes or their loved ones' homes while they're not able to be there," said Genevieve Thiers, founder and CEO of Sittercity. "The Sittercity video monitoring program is a natural addition to our offerings, enabling our members, as well as non-members, to observe caregivers in their home when they're not there to ensure that their loved ones and belongings are safe."

You don't need eyes in the back of your head; you just need them in the center of your home. Whether you're a parent wondering if your babysitter is more attached to her cell phone than your little bundle of joy; a pet owner curious about how much time the dog walker really spends with Fido; a homeowner interested in protecting your valuables; or an adult wanting to stay more connected with your aging parent, the Sittercity Video Monitoring Program lets you see what's going on in your home whether you're there or not. The Program helps provide peace of mind so that parents and other adults can stop worrying about what might be. With the video monitoring program, they'll know.

For more information and pricing on the Sittercity Video Monitoring Program, visit http://www.sittercity.com/video_monitoring_program.html.